What is cold process handmade soap

Cold process soap (abbreviated as CP) is made using the cold process method, which means that saponification occurs at room temperature throughout the production process, with the entire process kept below 40 degrees Celsius. This method helps to prevent the loss of nutrients and the deterioration of certain oils that can occur at high temperatures. The production process requires a significant amount of time, during which natural plant extracts and essential oils are added. After 1-2 months of natural drying and saponification, the soap produces abundant natural glycerin. This results in a soap that feels refreshing and moisturizing when used, is non-irritating to the skin, and provides a gentle cleansing experience.

Why handmade soap

Handmade soap is often considered better than mass-produced commercial soap because it retains natural glycerin, a moisturizing byproduct of the saponification process, which is typically removed in industrial soap production. Additionally, handmade soaps are crafted with high-quality, natural ingredients like plant oils, essential oils, and botanicals, making them gentler and more nourishing for the skin. They are also free from synthetic additives, harsh chemicals, and artificial fragrances, offering a purer and more personalized skincare experience.
